Gingival hypertrophy associated with cyclosporin administration in a kidney transplant recipient with systemic lupus erythematosus. A 53-year-old black female developed gingival hypertrophy approximately 2 months after receiving a kidney transplantation. The transplanted kidney was previously removed because of end-stage renal disease caused by systemic lupus erythematosus. Cyclosporin was administered to prevent graft rejection. Gingival inflammation and hypertrophy were present in all four quadrants. Oral manifestations were suspected as a consequence of cyclosporin and systemic lupus erythematosus administration. The South American continent is the home to the second oldest civilisations on the planet. From the Amazon basin all the way down to Patagonia, South America's vast arid interior and coasts are home to some of the least populous nations. The Inuit and the Dinka live under the surface of the permafrost of the frozen north and in the dense jungles of the equator respectively, while the African nations face the harsh seasonal conditions of the Sahara. In fact, between the poles and sub-tropics, there are more than 930 million people living under the tropical sun. Here in the eastern and southern reaches of the continent, the average day is sunny and the population is almost three times the size of that of India. Estimates put the human population on the continent at 485 million and growing, with the head of the international agency who predicts world population growth up to the year 2050 at 200 million. There are countries spanning an entire continent, but there are no second cities or countries, and each nation occupies a distinct land mass. Image: Courtesy of Kenamund. As Gizmodo observed: The first world might have the most beautiful cities, but Asia has the most cities. If we rank the world's capitals, every Asian city is in the top 10. Singapore, Riyadh, Kolkata, Jakarta and Bangkok are in first, second, fourth, fifth and sixth place, respectively. Hong Kong, though not a capital, is one of the globe's most important cities and can lay claim to being the world's most densely populated urban centre. Add Hong Kong's area and population and it takes the top spot. What is perhaps most striking about these Asian cities isn't just the sheer number of people, but also
