The program will be abolished on June 15th. The "Search For..." campaign was launched by the United Nations agency last year, and aimed at exposing the Internet to new public figures, but the efforts of WIPO had to be stopped, due to the consequences of the promotion of trademarks at the expense of copyright. The WIPO Director-General Francis Gurry said in a statement that the campaign must be stopped in the interest of fairness and of protecting the cultural heritage. "The online search for literary, artistic and cultural heritage materials includes a legal disclaimer at the very top of the search results page, stating 'No rights are transferred,' said the U.N. agency. "The disclaimer is worded in the hope of avoiding any misunderstanding that it might have. However, it is impossible to enforce such a disclaimer with a principle of limitation of use [like trademark law] that is one of the cornerstones of intellectual property law." WIPO said in the announcement that the WIPO Partnership Agreement, which seeks to improve the global intellectual property system, was designed with the aim of addressing copyright law and the Internet. minna no nihongo shokyyu minna no nihongo shokyyu 1 minna no nihongo shokyyu iiFor my culture, I've heard that my mother speak in a unique tone, which is really weird. I don't really understand the reason, maybe it's the way we're living in Romania? or it's the way my parents don't speak like I do now? It's not the language, because I'll understand every word of the basic common language, I'm just bad at pronouncing. As for the tone, I don't even know where to look to be able to create sounds, one thing I've been trying a lot is to mimic my parents, but I have no idea if that would work. All in all, it is not particularly important, but I might need some tips. Re: How to produce consonants for English? It may be that you sound like your mother when speaking. My mother can be heard as speaking with a heavy accent on my dad's side of the family. In England I'm told this was common among the upper class. I think the problem you're having is with your mouth. When you talk to you appear to be flapping it open and closed. What you need to do is to practice making sounds on your own. First of all learn the vowel sounds. You can do that here or here After you've become accustomed to making vowel sounds try to mimic them on your mouth. Practice on yourself. Once you've been practicing this for a few weeks try to call someone. If you do a good enough job you may be able to master the matter. Have fun. Re: How to produce consonants for English?
