The purpose of this study was to examine women's experiences of rape and sexual assault and related supports in the New Zealand context. A questionnaire to be completed by women who were victims of rape, attempted rape or other forms of sexual violence and a research assistant were sent to women registered with Rape Crisis and Women's Refuge offices and paid for by the Rape Prevention Project/New Zealand Women's Refuge Action Fund. There were 28 respondents (26% of approximately 2,000). A further 88 women who were seeking support as a result of these crimes also completed the questionnaire, although they were not included in this study. Themes identified in the women's stories include the negative outcome of the crime, the first person to whom they turned for help and their level of help-seeking. Implications for practice are drawn and service planning issues are raised.package
